Chemnitz

Hi! It's great you've landed here and discovered us! Welcome to a completely new perspective on Chemnitz – are you curious?

ChemNetz - An Alternative Invitation to Discover Our City!

When visiting a new city, do you ever wonder where the alternative cultural scene is? Then this map is for you. For us, one of the city's greatest attractions is its (sub)cultural life. We want to highlight the diverse places and people that shape culture in Chemnitz, some of which are a little hidden in the 39 districts. This map presents, among so much more, places of culture and participation, community gardens, as well as spaces to give and to take. With this map, you can experience the city outside of its well-known attractions!

Find out how you can immerse yourself in Chemnitz's culture – whether it's in an urban gardening project, a self-help workshop, a political group, or a community center.

Accessibility

All locations on our map are marked according to their structural accessibility. We also recommend the website wheelmap.org. There you will find an overview and ratings of wheelchair accessible places. You can also leave your personal rating here.

1 Theatre in the Woods

SE P S FD

Theatre performances, concerts, cabaret, and large open-air festivals take place at the KÜCHWALDBÜHNE, which is run by volunteers. The forest ambience and the 1950s architectural style create a special atmosphere. The stage is surrounded by trees – a highlight for everyone!

Good to Know

1. Bus, Train, Bike, Walk

Many roads lead to Rome, but every line stops at Zentralhaltestelle. Apart from the 82, every streetcar and every bus in Chemnitz stops at "Zenti" at some point. In the evenings, all lines wait for each other and you can change between lines, also known as a "rendezvous". The C lines take you to the Chemnitz cultural region, which is always worth a day trip. Going on foot is often a good option too - the city is very walkable. Especially in the evening and at night it's also great to have a bike so you don't have to rely on the night bus.

2. Chemnitz at Night

You often hear that the curbs are raised in the evening. Unfortunately, it is true that many stores are not open until late and finding a midnight snack is borderline impossible. Snacks and drinks for emergencies are therefore key.

3. Toilets

Many public toilets are listed on our digital map. You can use the "Nette Toilette" app to find restaurants that make their toilets available.

4. Water

Of course the tap water in Chemnitz is drinkable! There are three drinking water fountains in the city, which we have marked on the map. To cool off in the summer, there are lakes just outside the city and in the Ore Mountains.

5. Cash

An essential companion in everyday life in Chemnitz - card payment is not yet available in many places.

Community Gardens

Want to see a Chemnitzer's eyes light up while talking about their favorite hobby? - Open up a conversation about their garden. Gardening is a very popular hobby among Chemnitzers and in East Germany generally. Allotment gardens (here we call them Kleingarten) were important spaces for individuals and families to grow their own food during the GDR times. They served as places for socializing and maintaining a connection to nature in cities, as well as offering a sense of autonomy and personal freedom. Chemnitz has a whopping 17,000 so called Kleingärten. It's a tremendously important part of our culture. Have you ever experienced one of those spaces? Usually it's allowed to walk through them and check out the gardens. You will be welcomed by odd garden gnomes, gorgeous flowers and much more! Just abide by these two rules: 1. you must greet everyone you see; 2. don't leave the paths! A simple "Hallo" or "Guten Tag" is enough, but keep in mind you're crossing through people's hideaways. In addition to the allotment gardens there are numerous urban gardening projects. These often old wastelands, backyards, or unused meadows promote biodiversity and ecology. We recommend these places to everyone interested in ecology and climate justice.

G1 Intercultural Garden Bunte Erde

The Bunte Erde association uses urban gardening based on sustainable and ecological principles to connect people of different cultures. In courses for children and adults, they show how to create healthy self-sufficiency while conserving resources.

G4 Gartenutopie

This democratically organised neighbourhood garden connects ecology and citizen participation, creating ecological and social value in Sonnenberg.

culture and participation, community gardens, as well as spaces to give and to take. With this map, you can experience the city outside of its well-known attractions! Why ChemNetz? We call our map ChemNetz since it's a "Netz" (German for "Net or Grid") connecting cool spots in Chemnitz with each other and with people from everywhere.

Where Are We?

With around 250,000 inhabitants, Chemnitz is the third-largest city in Saxony and one of the cities with the oldest population in Europe. During the GDR era (German Democratic Republic)*, Chemnitz was called "Karl-Marx-Stadt", and you can still find the second-largest bronze bust in the world – the head of Karl Marx – in the city centre. Always worth a photo! Alongside the socialist traces, you'll also find many lost places in Chemnitz – old factory sites, now half overgrown, that only hint with a bit of imagination at what they once were. Find more information on this under "Five Minutes of History".

What Is Going On?

Chemnitz has often been overshadowed by Leipzig and Dresden. The phrase „Nothing's going on in Chemnitz?" is heard quite often. We say: That's a prejudice and this map proves it! For us, what sets the city apart today is its (sub) culture. Throughout the city you'll find a network of small, large, professional, and self-organized places. Here, people work together to create a vibrant city. Getting creative, starting projects together, helping other groups out – that's the Chemnitz spirit.

What Awaits You on the Map?

We invite you to get to know Chemnitz and its alleys. On our map, we show you wasteland sites that have become community gardens, cultural centers, factory areas and backyards.

The Digital Map

In addition to the printed map, we offer a digital map (stadtkarte-chemnetz.de). Here you can find more information that didn't make it onto paper, such as contacts for the locations or information about public toilets.

What Else?

2025 is a big year for Chemnitz. The cultural venues, the city, and its residents have been preparing for the year as European Capital of Culture for a long time. Now the time has finally come, and there is plenty to discover.

You can find out how best to get around Chemnitz by bus and train, where to find the latest information on events and gossip, or what the "Nischl" is all about in our info boxes. They will prepare you to walk through our city like a local. Have fun discovering!

The KINDERFILMHAUS offers remarkable movies that captivate young audiences while offering enjoyment for all ages. This is where the youngest have their first contact with the cinema. The "Schlingel" international film festival for children and young audiences is an important institution in Chemnitz's cultural landscape too.

The Legacy of Industrialization

"People work in Chemnitz, trade in Leipzig, and squander their money in Dresden", as the old saying goes. Chemnitz is very proud of its industrial heritage. Thanks to the bleaching privilege and its favorable location, the city quickly became a hotspot for the textile industry, as well as mechanical engineering. Between 1800 and 1883, the population increased almost tenfold to 103,000 inhabitants. Today, many former industrial buildings are cultural venues. For a short tour to experience the vibe of industrial architecture combined with cultural events, you can visit Wirkbau, home to ATOMINO 44. With a coffee to go from Bohnenmeister, you can walk to Stadtpark 54. Along Alchemnitzer Straße, you'll come across numerous factories: abandoned places, and cultural venues. From Stadtpark, take a moment to admire the Viadukt, an old railway bridge. If you'd like to explore further, head to Schönherrfabrik, where you'll find DRUCKBUDE 2 a spot for skateboarding. There, you'll also find a bookcase and a café.

The Fritz Heckert Area - The City Within the City

Fifty years ago, this was the second-largest inner-city Plattenbaubgebiet (prefabricated concrete slab tower block housing area) in the former GDR*. Between 1970 and 1990, it was home to 38% of the children born in Chemnitz. Since reunification, the five districts (Kappel, Hutholz, Markersdorf, Morgenleite, Helbersdorf) have been characterized by renaturation and depopulation. The number of inhabitants plummeted from 92,000 to just 37,000. In addition to the socialist architecture and building art, there is now street art to be seen, such as the mural "In unserer Mitte" in memory of the victims of the NSU* (located at Friedrich-Viertel-Str. 2). Visit this area by taking tram no. 4 to the station "Hutholz." From here, you can take a walk to the mural "In unserer Mitte" (more information available under 5 Minutes of History). From there, it is a 25-minute walk to the MARKERSDORFER OASE 09, a park that exemplifies the transformation from a residential area to a recreational space. At this location, you can also find a café or grab something to eat. You can return to the city center by taking bus no. 52.

3 Chemnitz Valley Cycle Path

The river Chemnitz got its original name „Kamenitz“ from stones protruding from the river. In the 14th century, the river became very important for the textile industry when bleaching plants were established here. Today, the Chemnitz river is primarily used for recreation. The cycle path leads around 30 km along the river, which still bears the traces of industrialization, through the city. If you follow the current, you will pass through the lush city park, across the city center and along the power station with its gigantic “Lulatsch” chimney, eventually reaching nature. The river sometimes looks like a mountain stream here, with large boulders and steep banks. The flora and fauna along the way alone are worth a visit, whether by bike or on inline skates.

Active in the District

Life in Chemnitz is not concentrated in one spot, it takes place all over the city. Not only are there a wide range of events to discover, but also institutions and initiatives of the city's DIY-culture. They provide information about current events and support for projects. This is where locals go to connect with each other. If you want to get to know the neighbourhood better, visit the community centres, get flyers, stickers, and all the information you'll need (also in English). Discover lesser known spots and events. The community centres give you a glimpse into the district's culture, beyond the classic tourist info.

5 Minutes of History

So, You Want to Learn More About Chemnitz's History?

Three Chemnitz legends, who each shaped this city in their own way, will tell you their part of the story: Minna Simon, the first strike leader of the workers' movement; Marianne Brandt, the famous Bauhaus designer; and Jutta Müller, the legendary figure skating coach. They take a walk through the city they know so well.

"Ah, Chemnitz," Minna begins with a proud smile, "this is where we went on strike in 1871 for better working conditions and fair wages. Factories as far as the eye could see and chimneys that darkened the sky. But we were tough and got our way!" She grins proudly as she points to the old factory buildings. "Did you know that Chemnitz was called the 'Manchester of Saxony'? We drove industrialization like no other city in Saxony."

"Oh, I can well imagine," replies Marianne Brandt, with a passion for architecture. "Chemnitz was already a center for textiles and mechanical engineering in the 19th century. This combination of functionality and aesthetics would have inspired the Bauhaus! And me? Well, my work with clear lines and elegant design is also rooted here. This city has always focused on pragmatism and beauty." They stop by the Red Tower, which proudly watches over the city, undaunted by the centuries. "This tower has seen it all - from the early days of trade to the destruction of the Second World War and the reconstruction afterwards."

"Speaking of reconstruction," Jutta Müller interjects with a laugh. "Only one thing comes to mind: Karl-Marx-Stadt. Chemnitz was renamed in 1953 and I trained my athletes on the ice here. Hard work, discipline and a bit of glamour - that's what Chemnitz embodies for me. No matter how many times you fall, you get back up and keep going." She winks and points. "And who could miss the giant Karl Marx head, the 'Nischel'? It's been the city's landmark since 1971 and looks down on us critically - or is that more of an encouraging look?"

"That's what makes Chemnitz special," agrees Marianne. "Even the thermos flask was developed here! Adolf Ferdinand Weinhold laid the foundation for the thermos flask with his invention. And then there's Fit, the dishwashing liquid from the region - the curved bottle shape is iconic."

The three women walk on, along the streets of Chemnitz. The city is not just an industrial metropolis, but full of change, creative minds and perseverance - and this is reflected in every corner.

Besides industrialization, the history of Chemnitz is also one of unresolved conflicts and far-right continuity. Following a violent alliance between neo-Nazis, hooligans, and implicitly right-wing urban society, Chemnitz hit the global news in 2018. Caused by a deadly attack at the city festival, Chemnitz became the target of far-right mobilization. There is a long history of right-wing violence here, be it the so-called "baseball bat years" of the 90s, the NSU complex in the 2000s, or the continuity of right-wing mobilization to this day. the city festival, Chemnitz became the target of far-right mobilization. There is a long history of right-wing violence here, be it the so-called "baseball bat years" of the 90s, the NSU complex in the 2000s, or the continuity of right-wing mobilization to this day. Groups that stand up for a cosmopolitan city for everybody and a network of solidarity are countering this. Chemnitz has many places and activists who are taking a stand against the right. They can use all the help they can get.

The NSU (National Socialist Underground) was a far-right terrorist network in Germany responsible for a series of racially motivated murders. The group, whose so called "core trio" originated from Thuringia, also carried out numerous robberies in eastern and western Germany as well as bomb attacks, causing significant injuries and damage. Chemnitz was the residence of the so called "trio" from 2000 to 2001, and one of their places of operation. To this day, the crimes have not been fully investigated or resolved. The Chemnitz model, i.e. streetcars that commute between Chemnitz and the surrounding area, makes the cultural region accessible. In the Ore Mountains, there are great hikes and the mining tradition (a UNESCO World Heritage Site) to experience. The region also offers reservoirs and bathing lakes.
